

Darrick Tsosie, Jemez Pueblo, New Mexico

Jemez Pueblo Storyteller Pottery

Darrick Tsosie is a Native American potter from the Pueblo of Jemez located in New Mexico. Darrick began learning and making pottery as child alongside his parents Emily Tsosie (Fragua) and Leonard Tsosie.

Darrick specializes in hand-coiled cat and dog storytellers, animal figurines and traditional storytellers.

Darrick uses the native clays and paints from the Jemez Pueblo reservation along with a traditional firing method in the creation of his unique artwork.

Darrick is an award awarding winning artist, who won his first blue ribbon from the prestigious Santa Fe Indian Market at the age of 10 years-old: and has continued to win ribbons from the Santa Fe Indian Market, Eiteljorge Indian Market, and other juried art shows. He also participates the Autry Museum Indian Marketplace, Heard Museum Guild Indian Fair & Market, Red Earth Indian Festival, Pueblo Grande Indian Art Market and the Smithsonian's National Museum of the American Indian Art Market.
